Psychology Discovers Shame, a Master Emotion

By Daniel Goleman New York Times Service

NEW YORK --- Psychologists are belated-ly focusing on shame, a prevalent and powerful emotion that has somehow escaped rigorous scientific examination until now.

Everybody experiences shame, but part of the reason it has been so elusive, in psycholo-gical terms, is that it has been overshadowed by the study of guilt. It also is difficult to measure and harder to bring into the open than many other emotions that researchers

Shame is emerging as a "master emotion" that influences all the others. Its development is being traced back through childhood and its role in a wide range of human experience, from spurring the greatest of accomplishments to the most bitter of marital fights, is newly appreciated.

Much of the discomfort people feel in personal relationships may derive from shame, experts say. Some kinds of violence may be rooted in it, others say. And according to some, the way shame is handled in

TRAVEL UPDATE

Belgian Plan to Tax Visitors Assailed STRASBOURG, France (AP) — A top European Community executive warned Belgium on Tuesday that its proposal to tax foreign motorists may violate EC laws.

The Belgian government, burdened with a huge deficit, is planning to impose a tax oo tourist cars of 750 francs ($20), starting Jan. 1. The tax on trucks and buses would be 1,500 francs ($40).

Speaking before the European Parliament, Stanley Clinton Davis, the EC commissioner for consumer protection, said, "I sincerely hope they do not proceed with the proposal." He said that under EC laws, Belgium must consult its EC partners before imposing a road tax. Moreover, he said, the plan could violate recent EC legislation designed to reduce border controls. border controls.

Arab Boy Killed By Israeli Troops The Associated Press

NABLUS, Israeli-Occupied West Bank — A 12-year-old boy was shot to death and another was wounded Tuesday when Israeli troops clashed with Arab protest-ers at a refugee camp, a military official said. The clashes occurred while Defemse Minister Yitzhak Rabin toured Nablus, the largest Arab town in the disputed zone. Dozens of Israeli soldiers patrolled the streets, stopping and questioning Arah motorists.

The Palestine Press Service, an Arab news agency, said the boy was shot by Israeli troops during a demonstration to mark the fifth anniversary of the massacres in the Sabra and Chatilla refugee camps in

One of a series of messages from leading companies of the world appearing during the IHT's anniversary year.

Through Advanced Technology And Global Resources,

After 11 Years, We've Developed A New Word for Value.

Introducing Acer.

Acer offers a full spectrum of system solutions. All with proven value.

Our commitment to value and technical excellence is the base of Acer's success.

With an extensive global distribution network. Acer has been providing system solutions to businesses in more than 50 countries for almost a dozen years. We've helped our customers grow. And we've grown to match their needs.

Today Acer products span a comprehensive line of systems ranging from cost effective PCs-8088, 80286 and 80386-based models to high performance 80386, 68020-based multiuser Unix/Xenix systems.

Superior technology results in an R&D investment twice that of our major competitors. We have successfully developed more than 100 system and computer related products-an achievement unmatched by our competition.

Acer's R&D team has consistently delivered products with the most advanced technology. The Acer 1100, at 16 MHz, was among the first 32-bit 80386 systems released last year, and has already proven its value to thousands of businesses worldwide.

Our accomplishments have not gone unnoticed. Acer products have been singled out for innovative design awards in various international exhibits such as CeBIT, the largest computer exhibition in the world.

But the most powerful recognition comes from our customers who have fueled our growth.

Acer systems are used by major corporations and government agencies around the world. And their satisfaction has made them confident buyers who select our products over others. What does Acer represent?

Quality. Reliability. Price performance. Advanced technology. In a single word: value.

Acer products are designed to provide greater value with a higher performance cost ratio. The key products are:

Acer personal computers:
Acer 500 and 700 series—fully IBM PC/AT compatible Acer 900 Series-fully IBM PC/AT compatible Acer 1100 at 16 MHz-among the fastest 32-bit PCs available, 80386

Acer multiuser systems (Unix/Xenix):
Acer SYS-32/20-80386-based, entry-level multiuser solution
Acer SYS-32/300-68020-based, multiprocessor design expandable

Acer communications products: Acer modems-1200,2400 bps standalone and add-on, Bell and Ace: LAN 30 (local area network)-workstations and file servers with Ethernet or ARCnet plus Novell NetWare Acer PAC 5025-X.25 packet switching device

Mr. Borge's office said he is not giving interviews for the time being. He left Nicaragua on Saturday to visit Cuha.

Mr. Michel's plan is to amend a short-term "continuing resolution" that keeps the government operating past the Oct. I start of the federal fiscal year. The amendment, he said, would keep current levels of humanitarian and communications aid and delivery of weapons flowing to the contras, about $8.3 million a month. This aid is due to end Oct. 1.

Mr. Michel, of Illinois, said he had discussed his plan with President Ronald Reagan, an ardent supporter of the contras, and that the president had expressed no opposition.

In a peace plan jointly sponsored hy the House speaker, Jim Wright, a Texas Democrat, Mr. Reagan had agreed not to press for military aid to the contras until the peace plan had had a chance to succeed. The plan is to go into effect Nov. 7.

Mr. Michel, whose amendment would come before the House before the end of this month, said he did not believe his action violated the spirit of the Reagan-Wright

ST JAMES'S CLUB

Since the early part of the 18th Century, private clubs have been an integral part of London life. The St. James's Club Paris, like its sister Club in London. continues this great tradition, offering you a new concept in gracious hotel living; an excitingly different approach to service, combined with the exclusivity, privacy and discreet attentiveness that only a Club based on a 300 year tradition can offer. The St. James's Club Paris. "Un Hôtel Particulier," offers its discerning members and guests the same high standards that they have come to expect from and which they enjoy at the St. James's Club London. Occupying a magnificent château in almost an acre of its own lovely gardens situated in a quiet backwater of the 16th Arrondissement, the St. James's Club Paris epitomizes the very best of England and France. Facilities include beautiful pavilion pièd à terres, elegant suites, handsome deluxe bedrooms, a restaurant, a traditional library bar, health club and meeting salons. Though a private Club, membership is not required for your first stay.

We look forward to welcoming you. Manager Mr Kenneth Boone. St. James's Club. 5. Place Chancelier Adenauer, Avenue Bugeaud. 75116 Paris. Telephone 47 04 29 29.

U.S. AIDS Panel Forces Head of Staff to Resign

By Philip M. Boffey
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan's AIDS Commis-sion, already facing sharp challenges to its competence and credibility, has forced its executive director to resign.

The unexpected resignation Friday of Linda D. Sheaffer, a govern-ment health official on loan to the commission, suggests that the new-ly appointed panel is in severe dis-array as it begins the enormous task of examining virtually all aspects of the nation's programs to combat the worsening epidemic of acquired immune deliciency syn-

The action, which was not announced but was disclosed to reporters Monday, also appears to undercut the anthority of Dr. W. Eugene Mayberry, the chairman of the commission, who is the chief executive officer of the Mayo Clin-Emmett White, a Pima Indian, bestowing an eagle feather on Pope John Paul II in Phoenix. ic in Rochester, Minnesota.

> Dr. Mayberry had chosen Ms. Sheaffer for the job from a list of nominees suggested by government health officials and had reportedly argued for her retention despite the pleas that she be replaced by what one commissioner called a more "high-powered" executive.

In the end, Dr. Mayberry yielded to his colleagues and asked Ms. Sheaffer, who had won praise for her leadership of the federal Office of Organ Transplantation, to re-

Several prominent scientists and "I have to keep asking myself leaders of AIDS organizations have why I am in politics," she said last charged that the panel lacks the weekend during a political swing expertise and objectivity to carry through Western states. "And one out its assigned task of advising the sure thing I know is that I don't government on how best to protect have any interest in being a presifor the disease and treat its victims.

The panel has less than 10 months to produce a final report dealing with almost all aspects of AIDS, ranging from the scientific and ethical to the legal and economic - a task many of the commissioners themselves find dannt-

The chief reasons for forcing out Ms. Sheaffer, according to several commissioners, were dissatisfaction with the slow pace at which the panel has begun its work and a feeling that the commission could not possibly succeed in its mission without a more effective staff.

However, supporters of Ms. Sheaffer attribute her departure, in part at least, to a power struggle in which a few commissioners dissatisfied with Dr. Mayberry's leadership chose to eliminate his execu-

Ms. Sheaffer herself issued only a two-sentence statement: "After the recent meeting of the commission, the chairman asked that I resign. He did so because of internal disagreements within the commission that had nothing to do with my overall performance as the executive director."

Despite Support, Schroeder Has Second Thoughts on '88

By T.R. Reid Washington Post Sernce

DENVER - With two weeks remaining before the deadline she gave herself for a final decision on whether to seek the presidency, Representative Patricia Schroe der, Democrat of Colorado, has reached a fairly common political paign?" position known as "second thoughts."

All the analysts and indicators are giving Ms. Schroeder the message she hears chanted at rallies around the country: "Run, Pat, Run." Her direct mail experts say that the money to run a campaign can be raised. Various opinion polls show that she stands roughly in the middle of the crowded field of Democratic presidential con-

Ms. Schroeder says, is that lack of "money is not going to be a fig leaf I can hide behind" in deciding whether to run. She has accepted an invitation to participate in a debate of Democratic candidates in Iowa next week, and she is scheduled to make a speech at the National Press Club on Sept. 23. The speech could telegraph her ultimate decision on a candidacy. On Sunday, Schroeder backers throughout the country are to eather for "Run Pat Run" parties, at which a videotaped speech by Ms. Schroeder is to be played.

Ms. Schroeder's chief political adviser, Dan Buck, says that more than 800 parties are planned, designed to raise money and recruit campaign workers — if there is, indeed, to be a campaign.

General Assembly convened here Tuesday for a 12-week session likety to be dominated again by the U.S. campaign to revamp the organization.

The session was expected to be calmer and less confrontational than some in the past, particularly if talks in Washington this week between the U.S. secretary of state, George P. Shultz, and the Soviet foreign minister, Eduard A. Shevardnadze, go well, diplomats say.

Delegates also are unlikely to do anything that might disrupt delicate UN-backed peace initiatives onder way in Central America, Afchanistan and the Gulf.

By Barbara Crossette

New York Times Service
BANGKOK — The Socialist government of Burma, struggling with a rapidly deterio-rating economy and the imminent danger of food shortages, has embarked on its most radical trade and monetary changes in a quarter of a century.

The steps have provoked student protests and led to confusion in the marketplace. All educational institutions have been closed indefinitely, according to government radio broadcasts

Over the last two weeks, the government of Ne Win, who seized power in 1962, annonnced without warning that all restrictions on trade in staple foods were being lifted to get needed supplies into circulation.

Burmese were told on Sept. 1 that they are now allowed to buy, sell, store and transport rice, corn and bean crops free of government control. Since 1966, most commodity prices and distribution systems have been set by the Ne Win administration.

In addition, farmers will be required to pay taxes in foodstuffs, not cash, the government

On Sept. 5, all currency notes except small denominations were withdrawn from circula-

Reports reaching Bangkok from Rangoon, the Burmese capital, say that the cumulative effect of these decrees has thrown trade into confusion, with many shops closed.

For the first time since 1974, there have been student disturbances in Rangoon, apparently prompted by the withdrawal of cur-rency notes in denominations of 25 kyats, 35 kvats and 75 kyats, leaving only small bills in circulation. A U.S. dollar is worth about 6.6 kyats at official rates, and six or seven times that amount on the black market.

On Sept. 6, a sweeping government ordinance closed all universities, colleges, technical institutes, medical and dental schools, high schools, primary schools and part-time educational institutions, such as night schools and vocational schools, until further

Students were reported to be voicing the frustrations of a wider public. Burmese interviewed earlier this year said that many people had still not received new notes for bills they turned in when the government changed the currency to cut down on black market trade

Students, who say there are fewer and fewer jobs being created to meet their qualifi-cations as the economy stumbles, are joining the unemployed or underemployed in large

Many are the children of parents who were formerly oriddle class, but who have seen their professions shrink under a military dominated "Burmese Way to Socialism," the official credo of the ruling Burmese Socialist " Program Party. Most Burmese have been forced into some black market buying or Burma, with a high literacy level, is thought to have a per capita gross national product of about $180 annually.

In recent months, the drought that is affecting much of Asia has added to food-production problems caused by what devel-opment specialists call a badly conceived government rice-distribution system.

Signs that Burma's economy may be reaching a crisis came first in mid-August, when 'Ne Win, as chairman of the Socialist Program Party, convened government officials and announced that they must "stop hiding the facts" about the nation's economic failures.

International aid experts fear that if a significant part of this year's rice crop is lost, Burma, once one of the world's leading rice producers, could face famine for the first time. With few roads and minimal rail and air links, emergency relief could prove difficult.

Too Many Dollars for Sale

In response to the July figures for the U.S. trade deficit, the dollar's exchange rate is threatened with another lurch downward.

Description to Live Tourism the Live Tourism to the Live Tourism to Live Tourism the Live Tourism to Live T Devaluing the dollar is a bad way to try to cure the trade deficit. A falling exchange rate is already imposing heavy costs on the American economy. One of them is higher inflation. Another is higher interest rates. Together they can, in time, bring exports and imports into balance. But, left to themselves, they will do it through a long and grinding recession. That raises two ques-tions for the Reagan administration: How far is it prepared to let the dollar sink, and what other ideas does it have?

An American trade deficit throws dollars into the foreign exchange markets, and if no one is eager to buy them, the law of supply and demand takes over and the price falls. Through the first half of this decade a lot of foreign investors were eager to buy dollars, and they bid the exchange rate up. But about a year and a half ago these investors apparently decided that they were holding enough dollars and began to back off. In-creasingly the flood of dollars has been mopped up by foreign governments desper-ate to protect their exports and employ-ment. In the first five months of this year a dozen governments spent $78 billion buying dollars. As yon would expect, Japan, Taiwan, West Germany and Britain were the leaders. Even with governments' inter-going to keep that up indefinitely.

Americans have been disappointed that the substantial fall of the dollar's exchange rate in the last two years has not had more effect on the trade deficit. If the trade deficit is left solely to the exchange rates, the dollar will have to go much lower to bring it into balance — low enough to jeopardize not only America's prosperity but the world's. There are a couple of things that the United States needs to do to take some of the pressure off the exchange rates. One is to get the budget deficit down. That will slow the economy a bitle, reducing demand for, espe-cially, those increasingly expensive imports.

Another is to start paying serious atten-tion to oil imports. After six years of good behavior, they started to rise rapidly again early last year. For a time the consequences were offset by falling prices, but this year the ames and prices of imported oil are both up. Oil has been a major contributor to the widening of the trade deficit during the summer, and the deficit is another good reason to get to work again on energy conservation. In oil, as in trade generally, the United States has let itself become a country that consumes too much, lives beyond its means and does not seem to care much where the world's most powerful economy is heading.

African Famine, Again

Slim but promising gains in food produc-tion have been made by many African countries, but Angola and Ethiopia are con-spicuous exceptions. There famine on the immense scale of earlier years again looms. Marxist regimes rule in the two countries; they now seek food aid and in so doing pose hard policy choices to would-be donors, the United States first among them.

In Ethiopia, drought aggravating underdevelopment is the proximate cause of the threatened famine. But the condition is greatly worsened by the Mengisni government's farm collectivization and resettle-ment policies and by the cost of the assorted wars that it conducts against its own restive citizens. Having followed the Soviet example in imposing its hand on the countryside. the Mengistu regime now resists latter-day Soviet advice for farm reform.

As is usual when a Soviet Third World client gets ioto this sort of trouble, it turns to the international community for rescue. In similar circumstances only three years ago, the American government and public per-formed prodigies of relief. It is infuriating, but may be necessary, to do it again. To make the government mend its ways, a group of congressmen led by Representatives Toby Roth, a Wisconsin Republican, and Bill Gray, a Pennsylvania Democrat, favor imposing certain limited economic sanctions supposedly targeted on the Ethiopian government, oot on the people. But this is a gang that has never shrunk from exposing millions to starvatioo to keep itself in power. Sanctions or no, aid should be sent.

In Angola, the usual disabilities of underdevelopment are compounded by a 12-year civil war that rages with special intensity in the country's breadbasket. Fighting and land mines have driven great oumbers of peasants off the land, and the regime's policies have driven many of those who remain out of the market. The government chooses to expend very bittle of its available resources on its bungry citizens, preferring to leave their fate to the mercy of foreign donors. Moscow's knuckles for violating the tradition that inhibits political remarks by Supreme Court justices. But give him a round of applause for helping, in this bicentennial year of the Constitution, to remind America that the document was not immaculately conceived.

The political remarks were made in an interview. Justice Marshall said he placed President Reagan at "the bottom" of a list of modern presidents ranked for their solicitude about the rights of blacks. Justice Marshall is not alone in that view, but his comment was news because it is rare for a sitting justice to criticize a sitting president - for good reason. The court commands obedience to its decisions because it commands respect from ordinary Americans, and that respect depends on the justices' painstaking impar-tiality. Whatever diminishes that respect diminishes the court. In this case, Justice Marshall's comments about Mr. Reagan seem gratuitous, hardly worth the cost.

In the same interview, however, Justice Marshall returned to a more important theme that he had first addressed in a speech in May. He denounced the "perpetuation of slavery" and the disenfranchisement of women sanctioned in the Constitutioo in 1787, and said that this year's bicentennial Give Thurgood Marshall a rap on the celebration invited "a complacent belief" in Its framers "could oot have imagined oor would they have accepted, that the document they were drafting would one day be construed by a Supreme Court to which had been appointed a woman and the descendant of an African slave." Instice Marshall said. He was referring to Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and to himself, the only black ever to sit on the court. It was a sobering reminder that the Constitotion was a flawed document, written by toen with prejudices and weaknesses. Many Americans celebrate their heritage uncritically. But groups disfavored by the old arrangements - blacks, American Indians and women - do not have that luxury, for they live with the residue of the old unfairness.

Justice Marshall says that with the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments, adopted after the Civil War to secure the rights of blacks, you'll never find a better Constitution than this one." He might add the 19th Amendment, which gave women the right to vote. But the point is clear: The Constitution is not perfect but it is perfectible. The framers only started the process. It is for each generation of Americans to continue and improve it.

One American in Twelve

How many Hispanics are there in the United States? A lot more today than have relatively low education levels. But their in 1980, the Census Bureau reports, although it admits that it does oot bave the precise answer because it has been widening its definition of "Hispanic."

Whatever the definition, it is clear that the Hispanic population is growing rapidly. The numbers were 9.4 million in 1970, 14.6 million in 1980 and 18.8 million in 1987. Just 41/2 percent of Americans were counted as Hispanic in 1970, compared with 6 per-cent in 1980 and 8 percent in 1987.

Hispanics are not a homogeneous group, any more than the European immigrants of 1880-1924 were. Cuban-Americans, con-centrated in the Miami area and a few Eastern cities, have relatively high education and income levels; their oumbers stopped increasing in the middle 1980s. Central and South Americans are increasing rapidly in oumbers; their socioeconomic status is much lower. Mexican-Americans are by far the most numerous group, accounting for five out of eight Hispani

Overall, Hispanics in the United States incomes have increased since the 1981-82 recession, despite the arrival of hundreds of thousands of newcomers. Unemployment is not vastly higher (9.5 percent to March 1987) than among non-Hispanics (7 percent). Family incomes of Hispanics have risen in pace with those of other Americans but are still about one-third lower; about one-quarter of Hispanics live below the poverty line.

One way of looking at these numbers is to say that Hispanics tend to be behind other Americans, to suffer from disadvantages; another is to say that they are moving up rapidly, especially when you consider that many started off living elsewhere, in circumstances that are not statistically replicated anywhere in the United States. Hispanics are moving up the many ladders of success in America. The oumbers show a country increasingly Hispanic, but they only begin to suggest the drama of personal struggle and achievement which lies underneath them.

Nicaragua: It's Too Soon to Stop Aiding the Contras

N EW YORK — The signing of the Central American agreement on Aug. 7 produced an immediate euphoria, and there is intense pressure to "give peace a chance." The United States, however, has to make some urgent decisions.

It cannot be a passive observer. To do nothing until the Nov. 7 deadline (by which time a ceasefire is to be in place, aid to the Nicaraguan rebels is to be terminated and democratic reforms are to be implemented by the Sandinists) would in fact be to make some important and irreversible decisions decisions that could destroy the resistance movement and allow the further consolidation of Nica-ragua's Marxist-Leninist regime.

The negotiation process now under way could play out in a variety of ways. The most optimistic scenario is that everything would go according to definition and on schedule. Thus, a genuine cease-fire would be in place by Nov. 7, aid to the rebels would end and they would begin to transform themselves into players in the Nicara-guan political process. How they would fare as a political force is difficult to predict.

It is impossible to know what the Nicaraguan people really think about the Sandinists or the resistance. Any opinions expressed publicly have been put forward in a context of extreme repression. What we do know is that there is tremendous latent discontent within Nicaragna. Some of it is due to the disastrous economic condition of the country, some of it is politically motivated. Whether such dissatisfaction would dissipate with the implemen-tation of the kinds of domestic reforms envisioned By Susan Kaufman Purcell in the Central American peace proposal cannot be decided by reference to precedents, because none exists. Never before has a Marxist-Leninist regime agreed to institute truly democratic freedoms.

It is clear that the treaty gives a big advantage to the Sandinists. They do not have to hold presidential elections until 1990. The resistance must therefore sustain itself as an alternative political force for more than two years in a political system that will continue to be dominated by the Sandinists.

The ultimate success or failure of the rebels will depend on what the United States is prepared to do on their behalf. The agreement is vague on the timetable for implementing democratic reforms.
And there are indications that "democracy" has a very different meaning for the Sandinists.

The United States must therefore make two things clear: the limits of its tolerance regarding definitions and implementation of democratic reforms, and its refusal to cut off aid to the Nicaraguan resistance until there are credible signs of a democratic opening in Nicaragua. Failure to take such a position would allow the resistance to be destroyed not only as a military force, bot as a political force as well.

There is a different scenario possible — that the peace process will break down before the Nov. 7 deadline for a cease-fire. If that happens, the rebelsmust be in a position to resume their fight against the Sandinists. For this to occur, the United States should ideally continue military and humanitarism assistance to the resistance until Nov. 7.

But the reality is that the Sandinists would break off negotiations if the United States continued to

A possible compromise would involve providing only humanitarian aid to sustain the rebels between the Sept. 30 cutoff and the Nov. 7 deadline. This be intense to extend the deadline and continue to postpone military aid to the rebels. This process, infortunately, could drag on indefinitely. If so, it would ultimately destroy the resistance and leave the United States with little leverage to press Nicaragua to negotiate in good faith. The United States therefore needs to decide how to handle aid to the rebels even if oegotiations are continuing, unless some tangible progress has been made by Nov. 7 on the cease-fire and democratic reforms. This is an issue that cannot be left until Nov. 7;

Fairness in Trade: Promoting Workers' Rights workers' rights, it may not thereby be

By Bimal Ghosh

GENEVA — U.S. trade negotia-tors have placed a formal motion before GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, to have a study panel consider whether workers' rights should be more explicitly recognized under the oew GATT rules. This follows lengthy ef-forts by the United States before the ministerial-level trade meeting last year at Punta del Este, Uruguay.

But many governments, especially in the Third World, almost instinctively look upoo such attempts to influence labor policy through trade leverage as outside interference in lomestic policies. If this goes unchallenged, they fear, similar pressures could be used to influence them in other areas of policy.

Resistance to regulatory linkage between trade and workers' rights also stems from a suspicion that its real motive is to curb competition from developing countries. Even some U.S. legislators have described the provisions in a new trade bill before Congress, which would curb commerce with countries failing to recognize deriving any competitive advantage in international trade; or the gains may not be easily measurable. Workers' rights are a universal concept. Wage rates, on the other hand, vary between countries, depending primarily on domestic factors. There may be legitimate differences in wage levels between industrial nations and labor-surplus developing countries. If such differences are confused with cases of real labor exploitation or used as a bogey to fuel protectionism, this will only derail discussions on the trade and workers' rights issue.

The credibility of the rights issue will suffer if political considerations interfere too often. Under the 1984 IIS trade measure that made workers' rights a consideration in granting preferential trade benefits, the president got the power to waive actions against workers' rights violations. In most cases he has used that power. A key issue still remains to be addressed. There are roughly 1.1 billion unprotected workers in the Third World, about 77 percent of its total labor force. The sheer pressure of these vast masses will make it nearly impossible for Third World governments to enforce effectively a highly preferential labor policy for the trade sector without improving conditions in other sectors. And if by some miracle this can be done, it surely will add to social tension and unrest. Efforts to include a workers' rights provision in trade agreements will need to be supported by parallel ac-tion to improve the conditions of all improtected workers. Part of the funds resulting from the granting of trade benefits and additional aid resources could be used to that end. It will entail sustained and concerted work by the International Labor Organization, GATT and development fund-ing agencies such as the World Bank.

When Bases Are Hostage To Politics

By Flora Lewis

BARCELONA — There is a per-verse double strain in Europe now as some governments worry about a loss of the American defense commitment and others demand more concessions for the "favor" of U.S. use of bases. It reflects the confusion as Moscow and Washington move to their first agreement to really cut some arms. There is something peculiar about states seeing American support for their defense as a concession they provided that should be rewarded by U.S. concessions on trade (Turkey), sup-port against a local adversary port against a local adversary (Greece), aid (Portugal) or withdrawal of planes (Spain). There is also something peculiar about complaints against removing medium-range missles from both East and West by one state that booted out U.S. forces in 1966 (France) and another that accepted U.S. missiles on the condition that Wachington be prepared to necothat Washington be prepared to nego-tiate them away (West Germany). All this surfaced at the annual con-All this surraced at the annual con-ference of the International Institute for Strategic Studies here. It is an organization of security profession-als, but narrow and partisan domes-tic politics are intruding all over,

As host, Spain used the occasion to voice through its defense minister, Narcis Secra, its side of an increasing-ly peevish argument with America on the presence of a wing of 72 U.S. F-16s with a NATO mission.

Mr. Serra presented a series of remarkably contradictory grievances. He blamed the allies for not letting Spain into NATO while Franco was alive and blamed the United States for its defense accord with Franco. He said the allies were satisfied they could defend Europe without Spain then, but they should appreciate the great contribution Spain made by joining them oow, though it would not join in tasks "beyond the limits of exclusively national concerns."

This gobbledygook reflects lingering resentment at what many Span-iards saw as U.S. support for Franco. And it is an attempt by Spanish So-cialists to wriggle out of the mistake they admit they made by opposing NATO before they came to power.

Robert O'Neill, the retiring director of the institute, rapped Spain sharply for its parochialism, though he sought to balance his remarks and take account of Spanish sensitivities. Saluting Spain's brilliant transition to democracy, he said the allies looked forward to growing cooperation. "What we do not look forward to," he said, "is protracted wrangling between the U.S. and the Spanish government over Torreion [the fighter base near Madrid] and the F-16s, which could do serious carry wider strategic consequences.

Spain, for its part, knows that Europe does not want to be seen as asking the U.S. to withdraw forces. It is going to be extremely difficult to hold those that are here, and they will need to be held for a long time yet if the balance of forces is not to tip seriously against the West." He urged both sides to show "fine political judgment" and "a little more flexibility.

These were angry words from the usually exquisitely tactful Mr. O'Neill, an Australian scholar, and they represented the feelings of the major European governments, as shown in a strongly pro-NATO speech by Renato Ruggiero, an Italian minister.

The difference between the major and minor European alliance members is that the first see U.S. efforts as the bulwark of their own defense, and some of the second are tempted to use bases as hostages for their other demands. To some extent, Washington has invited this by making it sound as if bases around the world serve primarily American purposes.
The U.S. ambassador, Reginald Bartholomew, is trying hard to find a way around the dispute that serves both allied security and Spanish pride. Americans are justified in getting impatient when Europeans take them for granted as whipping boys in their own internal quarrels. But they should not jump to the conclusion that the defense partnership is no longer worth the cost and effort, or that they are not wanted. The strains highlight the need for renewing the Western strategic con-sensus, which can be done only by a full review of NATO policy in changing circumstances. There will almost surely be further, far more important arms reduction negotiations once the missile agreement is signed.

Each step into the unknown sets off all kinds of alarms. Spain wants to be in NATO but does not know what it wants to do. NATO wants to ease the threat of war but does not know which way is safest. It is time for the West to think it through again, together. The New York Times.

Bork: Grounds For Stomach-Deep Doubt

FW YORK —There are two errors running through the debate on Robert Bork. The first and most importent is that he is a real conservative.

It is sad that true intellectual conservarives, for whom preservation of indi-vidual liberty is supposed to be one of the fundamental traditions that have made the United States separate and standing above most nations, would support a man who would so radicalize the very concept of personal freedom hearings that began Tuesday, any senator is entitled —in fact duty bound —to vote against Judge Book if he feels the judge's opinions would produce a country radically different from the one the senator or his constituents want, or that has evolved out of American law and beliefs.

There is no need to seek other reasons, like tipping the court. Grounds for stomach-deep doubt exist in the Bork record: 1. He shows an open contempt for the Bill of Rights and particular disdain for freedom of expression. He would permit free political speech — up to a point. Unfortunately, that point is where free speech begins for many Americans: advocacy of civil disobedience, for instance.

Until fairly recently Judge Bork would have ruled out First Amendment protection for all nonpolitical forms of expression. Now he allows that maybe certain other subjects he deems significant might be covered - like science. American artists, novelists and dramatists are not used to checking in with a judge to find out how they can express themselves.

He would not permit the courts to block governmental invasion of people's private lives. The majority rules, he says, and if the majority of a state legislature wants to order a married couple not to use contraceptives, that is all right with Judge Bork. Senators should ask them-selves whether that would be all right with them, their spouses or constituents.

needs an invitation from Poland. Second, he needs a passport, still a privilege in most East European countries. Once he has this, he goes to the police. After being cleared by them, he may proceed to the bank to change a couple of East

German marks into a couple of Polish zlotys (the amount of which is stated on the passport). Only then can he hope to obtain a visa at the Polish Embassy.

He is not allowed to take anything with him to Poland - certainly no scarce daily goods (because of the constant shortages in East Germany)—and he is not allowed to take anything out of Poland either (certainly no food, be-cause of the shortages there).

So, what makes travel between East

Germany and Poland different from travel between East and West Germany?

There are differences; no wall; and nobody is shot (not immediately, in any case). Otherwise, for the two Germanys to follow the East German-Polish model would be a big step backward: About two million East Germans will travel to West Germany in 1987, but only about

3. He seems devoid of compassion or understanding about the mixture that cements America. Democracy means majority rule, he insists. Yes, but in America it means more — it means majority rule tempered by deep respect for the rights of minorities. Protecting those rights is the duty of legislatures and courts. America is a majority rule country made up of minorities. To be unable to grasp that, as Judge Bork seems unable, is a disability so severe as to be disqualifying for a Supreme Court justice.

4. He would destroy the Bill of Rights barrier between church and state. He not only would introduce religion into the schools but wants greater religious symbolism in American public life itself. 5. He is not a man of restrains philosophically but an adventurer, a real activist who would remake what American society has become, a country that has moved toward greater individual liberty, through a combination of legislative and judicial action. He would remove rights of expression and privacy that Americans have built into their lives. He would make it a tighter, narrower country where judges would be forbidden to pro-tect any individual or minority right at all unless it already happened to be written clearly into the law.

It is precisely because so often it is not written into the law that we need the Supreme Court. Judge Bork's America. would be a country where the people could not turn to judges for something called justice. Serving on the Supreme Court, he would wither American liber-

Money Follows the Women When They Follow the Men

By Ellen Goodman

B OSTON — Sometimes when I think about how lopsided change has been, the person who comes to mind is Joanie Caucus. Maybe it's not sensible to track the times through the comic strips, but Doonesbury's resident feminist has always been more mythic than comic.

The Joanie Caucus of the early '70s was a child-care worker. Now, in the late '80s, she is a lawyer with a young child of her own. Today she has it all, as they say, except of course decent child care. I find it hard to assess this kind of progress. There has been real, measurable success for women in the work world, the old men's sphere. And real, measurable failure in creating a support system for care-taking, the old female sphere. The change has been so lopsided that, as a society, America is visibly limping. Just last week the Census Burcau released a report that women now earn 70 cents for every male dollar. Things are getting better, slowly.

But money and status and the label of progress have followed the women who have followed the men. The wage gap is narrowest today for younger women, for women who have had the same education as men, chosen the same fields as men, lived the same work lives. The gap is wider for women who have gone into traditionally female fields, and for wom-on who have taken time out for child-bearing and child-rearing.

And what about the parallel problem, the care-taking gap? What about the children who have fallen into it?

Americans seem to have kids on their minds. Maybe people have finally noticed the limp of lopsidedness. The reports, the polls and the studies crossing my desk are full of concern about children. The more cynical of my peers believe that children are an "in" issue because the baby boom generation is finally having them. Whatever they do becomes news. But this is also the generation that has made the most notable and permanent changes in family and work patterns. The generation feeling the crunch.

In a poll just done for Kidspac, a political action committee, voters give as much political weight to kids' issues as to such "hot" subjects as trade. About 70 percent said they wanted the next presi-dent to pay more attention to the health of young children. The concern they register comes from liberals and conserva tives. Northerners and Southerners.

A script for these concerns came in recent advisory for candidates by The Analysis Group. It leads with this bald statement: "Kids are now the dominant form of expression for the politics of 1988 ... Kids are the vehicle through which voters are now expressing their concerns about a sea of changes in the modern family, in the life cycle and in the American economy."

The stump speech and basic position papers of nearly all the Democratic can-didates — parents themselves, many from two-working-parent families—carry some plan for children. Bruce Babbitt, perhaps the most underrated of the eight, puts child care at the center of his camp

At the same time, everything we read in America about education, poverty, teen-age pregnancy and even drugs seems, in some measure, a reflection of feelings about child neglect. Last week the Committee for Economic Development, a collection of business leaders, put their hard-nosed accounting down to child level and called for early-childhood and health programs for the poor.

There is everywhere the sound of a sociological clock ticking. I don't know how or if the concern will translate into action. Congress has yet to pass even a modest parental leave bill. How will it respond later this month when the Alliance for Better Childcare presents a bill asking for $2.5 billion? But there is a gathering consensus, a belief that uneven social change needs a midcourse correction. It has been easier to measure progress, especially for women, by adult male standards. The eco-nomic standards. In the next phase, America needs an additional measure to chart social progress by the standards of care-taking. Child care-taking. Washington Post Writers Group.

More on the Mecca Riots Regarding "Iran Turns Its Fires on a New 'Great Satan'" (Sept. 11):

As an American just back from a year in Kuwait, I must take exception to Amir Tahen's "more accurate picture of what happened in Mecca" this summer. He says that the Iranian demonstration "was not conceived as a pretext for provoking the bloody clashes that took place," but was intended rather to allow Iranian mullahs to peacefully address the gathering inside the Grand Mosque. But several of my Kuwaiti colleagues bottles often carried by pilgrims during their walk in the Grand Mosque were not allowed this year, because Iranian protesters filled their bottles with inthe mosque; and the plastic bags used to carry shoes were confiscated, because Iranian zealots had filled theirs with excrement, punched holes in them and shook them over the heads of praying pilgrims. Because of this, four male and four female guards were assigned to each entrance of the mosque to search pilgrims - all two million of them. Mr. Taher's conclusion that "the Iranians did not expect any strong reaction from the Sandis" and that the Mecca clashes resulted from the escalation of docile and level-headed Iranian strategies is clearly misleading.

Progress Under Conable

Regarding "The World Bank Needs New Ideas to Stay Relevant" (Aug. 11):

Sheldon Annis belittles the achievements of the World Bank under Barber Conable. But as a former consultant to the bank, it seems to me that its results can and Argentine loan-rescheduling negotiations that it can play a key role. Lending by the World Bank in support of structural reform programs accounted for 24 percent of the total in the 1987 fiscal year, up from 19 percent in 1986. Overall, the bank approved loans and credits to developing countries to-taling $17.7 billion in 1987, up from $16.3 billion in 1986. The bank has not yet begun any lending for projects to alleviate poverty. But while increasing its help with structural readjustment programs, it has advised governments on ways to minimize the social costs of adjustment to the poor by devising programs to allow rapid growth and increased productivity.

To protect the environment, the World Bank is participating in a global program to conserve tropical forests, and it is more than doubling its annual lending for forestry projects. It is also urgently assessing environmental threats in 30 vulnerable countries. And despite the outcry after its recent reorganization, a more flexible, responsive and streamlined organization appears to be gradually emerging.

One was Elliot Paul, who stands out in many memories for many reasons. A classic Paul story was the one about his semi-nude jog across Par-is after he'd lost all his dothes in an all-night poker game on the Ile-Saine Louis.

The game had broken up at dawn. Paul, after piteous pleas, was given back only his white polka-dot shorts and shoes. Thinking quickly, he tied a red sash around his middle and headed toward his apartment, away over on the Right Bank

Paul was not athletic. He panted and wobbled, but he kept on going, if only because he knew the flat in those days were fiercely strict about improper attire and he feared they might arrest him.

Soon he was being followed respectfully by about 50 cyclists; they took him to be a grand sportif, the certain winner of a Paris marathon finish. This and other Paul legends were current during my years at the Herald for, happily, he was still there. He was a prolific journalist, published several notable books (including "Life and Death of a Spanish Town," and "The Last Time I Saw Paris") and wrote some wonderfully droll detective stories.

Others, now gone, whom I remember with affection were Larry Dame, with whom I bicycled all over northern France on our days off. Ed Haffel introduced me to many pleasant features of Paris that the tourist seldom or never sees. It was with him, on rambles afoot, that I learned where to find the deer in the Bois de Boulogne, and with him I first saw the black swans of the Bagatelle. Vincent Bugeja, the Maltese, Tesuit-educated hedonist of the Ile-des-Naturistes, was also one of a kind.

There was Ned Calmer, whose French was so fluent that Managing Editor Eric Hawkins assigned him to cover the lurid Lady Owen murder trial - she was the French wife of a titled British resident. The trial lasted a week and was front-paged on both sides of the Channel. The famed novelist Somerset Maugham was hired at fabulous pay to cover the trial for the London Daily Mail and throughout the trial Ned of some sort, and they were sat beside Maugham on the intent on being there at the press bench, helping the great man. Awtrey was from Georgia and spoke English in an attocious cracker dialect. He had had high school French and majored in French at college, so he arrived with a pretty good grasp of the grammar. > Awtrey recorded (as I recall) that the first Englishlanguage newspaper published in Paris supported the pretensions of Bonnie Prince Charlie to the British throne. From there Awtrey moved on quickly to the advent of Bennett's Herald, with its unique features, such as the Old Philadelphia Lady's letter in the Mailbag, and so on down to the 1920s, not omitting certain shenanigans of pranksters on the Herald and Chicago Tribune staffs.

When he had his thesis printed, as required (at his own expense) it made a book of about 140 pages. with a 500-page effort written by a German woman who was getting a doctorate on the German-language press of Paris. There were no humorous incidents in her thesis.

Time passed, Awarey was called in for conferences ar the Sorbonne but, given no assurances, he began to despair of ever gening his degree. Finally, though, he was notified that on a certain date he must appear before a faculty tribunal and make an oral defense of his thesis, to which he could bring a very limited number of his wearing cap and gown. Awarey knew he wouldn't get another chance, and he rose to the occasion, speaking eloquent French with absolutely no trace of Georgia accent. It was spell-binding. There were tears in the professors' eyes as Awtrey finished his speech with a clarion call for Franco-American amity and freedom of the

Then the president of the tribunal stood up, bowed to each of his associates, adjusted his morear board, and announced with "le plus grand plaisir" that the carned degree of doctor of philosophy was conferred upon Monsieur Hugh Awtrey, in the name of the French Republic and the University of Paris.

Afterward, at the traditional champagne celebra-tion, a small but emotional affair, one of the professors confessed that they had not really intended to grant him the degree, but after such a masterly defense, they just had to.

NYSE Slips With Dollar, Bonds

NEW YORK - Prices on the New York Stock Exchange posted widespread losses in slow trading Tuesday, losing ground in the face of a declining dollar and weak bond prices.

or a deciming dollar and weak bond prices.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 46.46 points to 2566.58 after rising 4.30 points on Monday. Losers swamped gainers 11 to 4 and volume slipped to 136.24 million shares from 154.38 million on Monday.

Traders said a slightly lower dollar and bond price decimes pushed stock prices down. Meanthill while, potential buyers were in oo hurry because the market consensus is that before the market heads higher, it will return to last week's lows, where investors hope to buy stocks more cheap-"We expected that after last week's reflex raily the market would come down to retest the lows just under 2,500 on the Dow," said Hildegard Zagorski, analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities. The deterioration "could continue for a couple of days before the market, in a successful test of its lows, bounces and moves higher," she

If the Dow continues to slide even after it falls to 2,500, "we'll have to take another look around," Ms. Zagorski said. "We really haven't considered that yet."

Gene Jay Seagel, director of technical re-search at Gruntal & Co., also does not believe the market will backslide dramatically.

"The 2,500-level will pretty much be it for the heimer & Co., was less sanguine. "We've reached a point where good news is bad news." said Mr. Metz. He said that a strong economy will lead to higher bond yields, mak-ing bonds an "irresistible" investment that will attract money that otherwise might go into the stock market.

Mr. Metz said that the near-unanimous opin-ion that the Dow will retreat to 2,500 before it advances again has discouraged buying. On the other hand, the strong conviction that the marhet will move higher again means that relatively little selling has occurred. If the Dow disappoints people's expectations that it will bounce off 2,500, he said, a "mini-cascade" of selling will follow.

day appeared to have little impact on trading.

In August, retail sales rose 1.3 percent and industrial production climbed 0.3 percent.

Foster Wheeler was the most active NYSE-listed issue, falling 1½ to 22%. A group of companies led by New York investor Asher B. Edelman told the Securities and Exchange Commission that it holds 3.7 percent of Foster Wheeler's outstanding shares and may seek Wheeler's outstanding shares and may seek control of the company. Some stock speculators had believed the group already held a 4.5ercent stake.

IBM followed, dropping 5 to 157%. A private arbitration panel issued an order resolving a software copyright dispute between IBM and its largest Japanese competitor, Fujitsu, Fujitsu will make a payment to IBM, the amount not yet determined, and receive immunity from IBM claims of illegal software copying.

Bucking the Merger Trend, Y&R Plans a 3-Way Split

By GERALDINE FABRIKANT

New York Times Service EW YORK — In the past 18 months, Young & Rubicam, by every count the largest independent U.S. advertising agency, has added $300 million in new billings at its New York office, more than any other agency. So big has its New York office become that the management has announced a restructuring that will split Y&R New York into three separate groups, each reporting to a group

Each will have its own range of clients with its own account management, creative, media, consumer insights and business affairs mits.

In each of the recent mergers within the agency business, the question has been asked: What is the advantage for the clients? In the case of Y&R's restructuring, clients would appear to be getting an agency whose size is easier to deal with, and faster access to those people directly responsible for a campaign. And the shift seems to endorse the idea

New, smaller groups are expected to be easier for clients to deal with.

that creative thinking flourishes best in smaller environments. From the agency point of view, the move has a number of benefits. Alice Magdol-Conrad, president of Magdol & McCone, an executive search company in the agency business, said, "The move addresses the problem of how to keep good people from leaving when an agency gets too big and there is not enough room

However, in certain cases, such as media buying, where the leverage of functioning as a big agency can be extremely valuable, Y&R will have a single entity to serve all three groups.

Robert Guccione, head of Penthouse International, has given up on Spin, the music monthly his son, Robert Jr., started two years ago. Penthonse closed the magazine in August. But Robert Jr. has started it up again as an independent venture.

The younger Mr. Guccione, who is 31, said Monday that, after missing the October issue, Spin would be back on newsstands Nov. 17 with a November-December double issue and was scheduling monthly publication after that.

Robert Jr. will continue as editor and publisher. He has hired Richard Keech, Penthouse's advertising director, to take over the

The editorial content is expected to remain the same, with some added features. Spin is an upstart rival to the much larger and well-established Rolling Stone magazine, and it considers itself "on the leading edge of what's new and innovative," said Mr. Keech, who comes from Australia. "We have the market that everybody's looking for."

Bozell, Jacobs, Kenyon & Eckhardt of New York has been selected as the U.S. agency for Benckiser Consumer Products of Greenwich, Connecticut. The budget is in the range of $16 million to $20 million. The parent company, Benckiser Group, based near Frankfurt, uses Ted Bates and Doyle Dane for its European advertising.

WCRS Group, a major British advertising and communications group with substantial American holdings, says it is acquiring 49 percent of Group Belier, France's largest advertising agency, from the parent company, Eurocom SA.

Robert H. Irvine has been named executive vice president and Susan Emerson senior vice president at Bayer Bess Vanderwarker & Flynn in Chicago.

Albert Chambers has been named director of international public affairs at Ford Motor Co.

Carrian Officials Acquitted

But Other Fraud Charges Remain

By Patrick L. Smith

International Herald Tribune HONG KONG — A supreme court judge on Tuesday acquitted George Tan, who once headed the defunct Carrian property empire, and five co-defendants of conspiracy charges, ending the first phase of the most extensive commercial crime prosecution in Hong Kong's history.

Mr. Tan and his associates were charged with attempting to defraud shareholders in Carrian Investments Ltd., a holding company created by Mr. Tan in 1977. The complex network of companies controlled by Carrian collapsed in October 1983, leaving traceable debts of more than $1.2 billion.

British prosecutors alleged in the 18-month trial that the defendants overstated Carrian's profits in 1981 to mixlead the investment company's shareholders and creditors. The others charged were Bentley

Ho, Mr. Tan's deputy at Carrian; Stephen and Rogerio Lam, brothers associated with Mr. Tan; and David M. Begg and Anthony Lo. who worked at the accounting firm Price Waterhouse and audited Carrian's 1981 accounts.

The judge's ruling, which led to an acquittal by the jury that heard the case, was viewed as a substantial setback for Mr. Tan's prosecutors. Most enticism of their approach focused on the sweeping nature of the conspiracy Mr. Tan was said to have led. Mr. Tan, Mr. Ho and a number of others now face 23 counts of bribery and conspiracy to defraud in connection with loans extended to Carrian by Bumiputra Malaysia. Finance Ltd., a local subsidiary of Malaysia's largest bank and one of Carrian's leading creditors. Separately, Mr. Tan, Mr. Ho, the Lam brothers and an attorney who acted for Carrian also face frand charges relating to the sale of an office tower in 1980, when the Hong Kong property market was nearing its peak.

The market's subsequent collapse exposed Carrien as a concern built chiefly on debt.

Commodities Upturn Baffles Experts

By Nicholas D. Kristof New York Times Service

TOKYO — After numbling last year to their lowest levels since the 1930s, the prices of industrial commodities such as silver, lead, cotton, and rubber have been rising steadily this year, spawning new hope in the many countries that depend on sales of raw materials.

"The worst is over," said Bernardo M. Villegas, a prominent business economist in the Philippines, which relies heavily on exports of copper and other com-modities. "Commodity prices won't so back to the lows of the last few years. Instead, they'll remain constant or continue to rise steadily."

"We thought at first that it might be a one-month wonder, but it's been going on now for six months," said Nico Czypionka, chief economist of Standard Bank in South Africa, a country that depends on gold, diamonds, and other commodities for 80 percent of its export income, "Most commodity exporters have had a very serious deterioration in their terms of trade since 1981, and that appears to have reversed itself."

Costomer stockpiling appears to have triggered the rise in strikes and other special circumstances also have had an effect. The biggest beneficiaries of the stronger prices are expected to be developing countries. which as major commodity pro-ducers were hurt the most by the downturn in prices. The economies of certain regions of the

U.S. Banks Post Quarterly Loss, First Since '30s

WASHINGTON - The U.S. banking industry lost $10.6 billion in the second quarter of this year, the first quarterly loss since the Depression, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said Tuesday.

L. William Seidman, chairman of this federal agency that insures bank deposits at federally chartered banks, called the loss "clearly the worst quarter in the history of the industry since the FDIC began operating in 1934." He attributed the loss to the $21.2 billion set aside in reserves by money center banks anticipating ems collecting huge Third World debts.

For the first six months of the year, banks showed a $5.3 billion oss. The loss for the first half was cut by a record profit of $5.3 billion from the first quarter.

Mr. Seidman said he expected bank earnings to rebound in the second half, and he predicted that the industry would show a profit for the full year of between $4.5 billion to $6 billion.

The FDIC chairman said that

According to the FDIC's first-quarter banking profile, 2,354 of the 13,937 federally insured U.S. commercial banks were unprofitable. Although this meant that $3 percent of the banks showed a profit, the 10 largest U.S. banks all

Banks in the Southwest, hard-hit in the past two years by faltering energy prices, continued to account for about 40 percent of moneylosing institutions.

Mr. Seidman said the health of Midwestern banks has been im-proving as the price of agricultural ad stabilizes or rises slightly. Banks hold much of this land as collateral for farm loans. Despite the second-quarter industry losses and an expected post-Depression record of 200 bank failures this year, Mr. Seidman said he expected the FDIC insurance fund the loss for the second quarter was roughly to break even for the year.

U.S. Retail Sales Rise 1.3%, Factory Output Ahead 0.3%

WASHINGTON - Retail sales, bolstered by a surge in demand for autos, climbed 1.3 percent in Augost, the biggest increase in six months, the Commerce Department reported Tuesday.

At the same time, the Federal Reserve reported that U.S. industrial output edged up 0,3 percent in August, the smallest increase since a 0.1 percent rise in April.

The Commerce Department said retail sales totaled $128.6 billion in August, up $1.6 billion from July It was the biggest monthly increase since a 4.8 percent jump last February. It followed revised increases of 0.5 percent in July and

1.2 percent in June. Auto sales, spurred by incentive month, the biggest increase since a 13,7 percent rise in February, Excluding autos, retail sales would have risen a much more modest 0.3 percent in August.

Still, many analysts were encour aged. Earlier in the year there had been concern that high levels of consumer debt and sluggish income growth would force Americans to cut back on spending, especially for larger items. The Federal Reserve said the August increase in industrial output followed stronger gains of 0.8 percent in July and 0.7 percent in both June and May. Still, it marked the seventh consecutive month that industrial output has increased.

North Korea's Bank for Foreign Trade, in whose name the outstanding loans were made, agreed to resume negotiations after dropping a demand for new loans. The country is believed to owe $1.65 billion to $2.75 billion to the non-communist world. The proposed terms still have to be approved by about 100 Western banks, mostly from Europe, that are members of the two syndicates.

Morgan Polton, a debt negotiator at ANZ Bank, said the syndicates were continuing to explore ways of freezing North Korean asts in case no accord is reached.

A central element to the agreed terms is that North Korea make a down payment of 60 million DM.

U.S. Trade Gap At $41.1 Billion, Quarterly High

WASHINGTON - The U.S. deficit on the broadest measure of trade widened to a record $41.1 billion in the second quarter, the Commerce Department said Tuesday. That represents a $4.3 billion increase from the revised first quarter deficit of $36.8 billion. It previously was figured at $37.1 billion. The previous quarterly record was $38 billion in the last quarter of 1986.

The report tallies up nearly all U.S. trade, including mer-chandise, cash flows and trade in services. The department said that imports of goods and services rose $5.5 billion in the April to June quarter, to a total of $138.2 bil-hon, while exports gained just $1 billion to reach $100 billion.

Some industrial countries, in-cluding the United States, are also commodity exporters and feel the effects of price fluctuations. The example, which depends on the copper industry, lost 6,000 copper-related jobs in five years as the

Mr. Brunner also said that the price rise was not simply a result of the decline in the value of the dollar. (Most commodities are priced in dollars.)

Prices have risen in other currencies as well, though not so dramatically as in dollar terms. The Economist index of industrial commodity prices, for example, has risen by 25.8 percent in the last year even when measured in a currency unit based on a blend of currencies.

Some economists, including Mr. Brunner, attribute the price in-creases in part to stockpiling by customers who are worried about

Some economists said that although the building of stockpiles led to higher prices, the climb has taken on a momentum that defies of further price increases become self-fulfilling as corporate customers see prices rise and rush to build their inventories even further. By contrast, prices of food commodities have not risen. Indeed, when adjusted for exchange-rate movements, prices of food commodities such as sugar and wheat have declined.

Oil Prices Rise in Absence Of Progress on Gulf Peace

NEW YORK — Oil prices rose on world markets Tuesday as the United Nations secretary-general, Javier Pérez de Cuéllar, left the Gulf after failing to persuade OPEC members Iraq and Iran to accept a cease-fire in their nearly seven-year-old war. Analysts said prices also were supported by Kurdish guerrillas' claims that they attacked Iraqi forces and seized a district on the Turkish border near Baghdad's oil pipeline to Turkey.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, West Texas intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, closed 9 cents higher at $19.70 a barrel. It had reached $19.93 but "A cease-fire in the Gulf war would be a dramatic short-term negative for the oil market," said Sanford Margoshes, analyst at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. Analysis said an end to hostilities would let Iraq and Iran produce more oil and allow other Guif producers to step up exports without fear of attacks on their ship-

Baker Says U.S. Was 'Late' in Addressing Trade Deficits In 1985, when Mr. Baker became Treasury dural protectionism" that can be as harmful as WASHINGTON - Treasury Secretary Ismes A. Baker 3d said the Reagan administration was "a little late" in dealing with the U.S. trade deficits, but asserted that the trade picnire is improving despite last month's record $16.47 billion deficit.

'In a speech Monday at the Institute for International Economics, he also said the Reagan administration is urging major changes in the expected congressional trade bill before it is sent to the president.

Differing bills from the House of Representatives and Senate are now being reconciled in a conference committee.

Major elements of the bills are aimed at the administration's generally hands-off attimide during the first term of the Reagan presidency to rising trade deficits and the souring value of the U.S. dollar. The dollar made American products too expensive to compete overseas and lowered the cost of foreign goods entering leading to a more aggressive trade policy and a 41 percent drop in the dollar's value against the yen since September 1985 and a 36 percent drop against the Deutsche mark.

"For the last several years," Mr. Baker said, "no administration has worked harder than we have against subsidized imports and trade bar-

He added: "We may have been a little late in starting, but we have lacked nothing over the course of the past two-and-a-half years."

Mr. Baker said that while there were several ments of the congressional legislation that were reasonable, the proposals contain measures that could as harmful as the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act of 1930, a protectionist law that is widely credited as a major factor in causing the Decression.

In particular, Mr. Baker said, the bills contain measures limiting presidential discretion in mfair trade cases that would result in "proce-statutory protectionism.

Mr. Baker said the bills are too costly, single out many special interests for protection and include a rule calling for notification of plant closures that would produce a bureaucratic nightmare for U.S. companies.

The bills also propose an increase in regula-tions and reporting demands that would ham-per foreign investment in the United States. The president "will not sign a bill that throws up trade barriers, tramples the delicate weave network of commercial relationships," he said,

WHO GOES FIRST? The Story of Self-Experimentation in Medicine By Lawrence K. Altman, M.D. 430 pages. $22.50. Random House, 201 East 50th

Street, New York, N. Y. 10022. Reviewed by Lee Edson

A n enduring theme in science fiction, in-deed in general literature, is that of the slightly mad scientist who carries out a daring and noble experiment on himself and is ulti-mately destroyed by it in some grotesque way. The classic example is the case in which the virtuous Dr. Jekyll succumbs to his own creation, the part of him that is the evil Mr. Hyde. His inevitable self-destruction characterizes the self-experimenter of fiction; it is the opposite effect, a high degree of success, that marks the glory of real-life self-experiment. At least that is the thrust of a new book by Dr. Law-rence K. Altman, a medical reporter for The New York Times. "Who Goes First?" has 14 major profiles interspersed with a oumber of mini-profiles of dedicated doctor-researchers who selflessly pot their lives on the line (or led teams that did) to advance the cause of medi-Some of the stories are in part familiar reruns. Like the stories of Walter Reed and Louis Pasteur, and the well-publicized tale of the Air Force's Dr. John Paul Stapp, who strapped himself into a rocket sled and blasted off near the speed of sound to determine how many G's of acceleration and deceleration the human body could withstand. Less familiar but equally heroic profiles include those of William Harrington, who tin-kered with his own bloodstream to learn the secret of idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura, a disorder of young women that causes excessive and sometimes deadly vaginal bleed-ing, and Werner Forssmann, who threaded a catheter through one of his veins and into his heart to open a new world of surgery.

Not all of Altman's subjects who went first survived their self-imposed ordeal. Jesse Lazear, an msung hero of the war on yellow fever, took the bite of a mosquito and died in

This book is an ambitious attempt to illuminate a little-known corner of medical history and to focus on an approach that in Altman's view has contributed greatly to medical progress. Unfortunately, not all of Altman's subjects turn out to be benefactors of this tradi-

THOSE who like to solve at lessure the difficult problems in play and defense that crop up at the card table should cover the East-West cards in the diagramed deal and plan the play in three no-trump. West has opened three bearts and led the heart king. East plays the eight, and if you hold up your ace. West will continue with the heart ten.

This is taken from "A New Approach to Play and De-fense, Volume 2," the latest in the series of many fine books from the pen of Edwin Kantar. It consists of 100 problems in matched play-and-defense pairs, and is available for $10.95 including postage from the author, P.O. Box 427, Venice, California 90291.

To put the length of this match into some perspective, consider this; during his straight set victories in the last two finals here, Lendl played a total of 4 hours, 41 minutes. In fact, Lendl and Wilander played for 40 minutes longer than Martina Navranilova did Monday in winning two and 1-4 down to beat Kathy Jordan and Elizabeth Smylie, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2, avenging a loss in the 1985 Wimbledon final that denied Navratilova a triple there. Next, in mixed doubles, in a final as dramatic as any in the tournament, Navratilova and Emilio Sanchez beat

"I was really, really nervous . . . I've been so close so many times, it feels great to get it." Navratilova became the first person since Billie Jean King at Wimbledon in 1973, and the first in this tournsment since Margaret Court in 1970, to win a triple. The brisk, aggressive play seen in both doubles matches was in striking contrast to the men's match. Lendl and Wilander needed 4 hours, 23 minutes to finish four sets in the French Open final this year. But no one imagined they could somehow play longer here. "When I play Lendl I can't go for my shots and hit the ball as hard as I can't Wilsinder said. "Because if I do, he'll just hit It back

Real Madrid, by contrast, has amassed 18 goals in three league matches. Seven were scored against Zaragoza last Sunday, with Emilio Butragueño leading the chase. His blend of explosion and self-control is irrepressible. In the words of teammate Miguel Gonzales, a.k.a. Michel: "The best thing about Emilio, apart from his speed, is his cold blood."

Butragueño, who is affectionately called el Buitre, the Vulture, constantly embarrasses those Madrid experts who once told him to go sell perfume, like his father. But he has been spying on Napoli to assess how his pal Maradona is getting along with Careca. Still, Madrid has a wily old standby, Carlos Santillana, who may not, at age 35, go 90 minutes but ramains an instinctive goal scorer. Overcoming the Gore

By Russell Baker

N EW YORK — At some point back there around "Platoon," I started closing my eyes when the shooting started I was ashamed.
"Just like a girl," I thought, and was immediately ashamed again. this time for thinking sexist thoughts. There are so many things to be ashamed about nowadays, at least if ynu're over 29.

I have this theory that people under 30 have rigged the shame standards so that people over 30 have to feel ashamed about almost everything while people under nev-er have to feel ashamed about anything. Yes, I am ashamed of having this theory because it seems paranoid. Why it is now shameful in be a paranoid I don't know, because it used to be fashionable.

Nevertheless, the reason I have this theory is that while I am ashamed of practically everything I do, think and feel nawadays, the under-30 set doesn't seem ashamed of anything.

Here's an illustration: Gary Hart, nver 30, turns up nn televi-sinn declaring he is ashamed because of the Donna Rice business, and Rice, under 30, turns up in a leering television commercial passed the big test and am finally shamelessly cashing in on the shaming of Hart.

Are you telling me there's no dnuble standard here? Why isn't Rice just as ashamed as Hart is?

This dnuble standard appeared back in the 1960s when a man over 30 had to feel ashamed of being a "dirty old man" if he was interested in the spectacle afforded by all those young wamen ramping through that entertaining decade in advanced states of exposure. Men under 30 who looked didn't have to live with the guilt of being "dirty ynung men."

Anyhow, closing my eyes during the "Platoon" gore scenes did make me feel ashamed and sissified. The truth is that even when I was under 30, badly mutilated flesh upset me. One night in police-reporting days when I was only 23, I almost fainted in a hospital accident ward when an overworked doctor asked me to hald a living hand, still attached to yawning and wishing something the arm, that had been recently run over by a streetcar.

Nowadays millinns of people, most of them under 30 and many still not out of pimples, not only witness such things without flinch ing, but also pay up to $5 and $6 a pop Inr the pleasure of doing so.

While watching "Robocop" the other night I was reminded if that terrible hand the overworked documents.

tor handed me long ago. The movie has one of the monumentally revolting moments in the annals of entertainment, when a psychopath blows the hero's hand nff with shotgun for an apparent reason except the scriptwriter's urge in have the psychopath say, "Somebody give him a hand."

Maybe the line was, "Lend him a hand, somebody." Never mind. Nate that I saw that scene. I did not

After "Platoon," spurred by shame, I tirelessly snught nut heavy gnre-and-mutilatinn films and struggled in sit through them openeyed without flinching. I wanted to become tough ennugh to undergo the nrdeal of modern movies with-out embarrassing friends and relatives by fainting dead away in the

In sitting through "Robocop" without a single swoon, I believe i ready to watch with the toughest even the stuff they throw at the PG-13 audience, After the revolting close-ups near the opening of "Ro-bocop," the show is all downhill.

As a movie, it is as bad a mess as the butchered cop bero who, after a little surgical patchwork, becomes sort of a flesh-and-metal robot. Is it a man, or is it a machine? Is it just a movie comic book, or is it a brutal attack on American society disguised as comic-book Grand Guignnl, the better to poison the minds of America's PG-13 gore gazers?

The movie itself doesn't know and I didn't care because twothirds of the way through some thing wonderful happened. Trapped in a garage by what seemed like an entire army division, Robocop was shot by heavy noons for such an interminable length of time that I caught myself really revolting would happen. I should be ashamed to admit that, but I'm not. Ynu know something? I could be getting younger. New York Times Service

'60 Minutes': A TV Hit at 20 Years

By Peter J. Boyer
New York Times Service

TEW YORK - The morning had just N EW YORK — The morning had just begun and Don Hewitt was already quite agitated, which drew nn special notice, as agitation is Hewitt's natural state. The executive producer of "60 Minutes" was aroused by a magazine advertisement trumpeting the fall schedule of the CBS television network. It listed every show but one — Hewitt's "60 Minutes."
"It's no insult to us," he said. "It's a lousy ad anyway. But for their nwn sake, you know what this ad ought to say?" And then he imagined a more suitable nne fea-turing "60 Minutes" in hig, bold letters at the top, and belnw, in smaller type, would be all the other CBS shows.

Hewith has a point. At CBS, there is "60 Minutes," and then there is everything else. In a medium in which 10 years is forever, it has endured through all or part of five U.S.

In the prime time environment, "60 Minutes" has been an epic hit. The broadcast has finished among the top 10 shows in the ratings for 10 consecutive years. It has made more mnney for CBS than any other show at the network ever has - in at least nne year making the difference between

As "60 Minutes" enters its 20th season there are undercurrents of uncertainty. The most enduring program nn televisinn is also the oldest; the average age of its on-camera stars is 57. Mike Wallace, the backbone of the hroadcast and one nf its two (with Harry Reasoner) original correspon-dents, will be 70 before this season ends and seriously considered retiring after last season; Reasoner, 64, is recovering from majnr lung surgery; Hewitt is 64.

There has been speculation suggesting that the broadcast's youngest and newest correspondent, Diane Sawyer, 41, is a candidate for other jobs, most notably an anchor chair on the "CBS Evening News." There will be new Sunday-night competition in the form of NFL football on cable on the West Coast, and a new ratings system, called "people meters," which is believed to favor younger audiences, looms with dangerous possibility.

Hewitt makes nn promises for the con-tinued success of "60 Minutes" after his contract expires. Of course, his contract runs until 1996.

In 1968, when "60 Minutes" appeared, there was a firmer commitment to publicaffairs programs than there came to be, and "60 Minutes" was allowed to live despite low ratings, It moved around on the schedule and then, in 1975, CBS moved it to Sunday at 7 P.M., a time reserved for public-affairs and family programming seems to be. And in the last year, there has

Harry Reasoner, Morley Safer, Ed Bradley (seated), Diane Sawyer, Mike Wallace face producer Don Hewitt. been some family bickering. When Sawyer them." Hewitt is already making contin-

making for relatively weak competition There, all the latent commerciality of "60 Minutes" bloomed, and it was quickly ap-parent that Hewitt's program was anything but another news broadcast. It was a newsentertainment hybrid, news as a show Hewitt thought of his correspondents as "a repertory group of reporters." They are paid show-business salaries — each of the correspondents earning about $1 million a year and Hewitt himself earning approximately $2.5 millinn annually.

The hroadcast concerned itself not only with public affairs but with fluff, too. There was also an interview with the political bumorist Art Buchwald, the first of what was to become a "60 Minutes" staple the celebrity interview. Even serions subjects, such as investiganve reporting, were entertaining, presented in the same "60 Minutes" expose style the nervous culprit, cornered by the tightly framed "60 Minutes" camera; or Mike Wallace, the avenging angel in a trench coat, pursuing baddies out of their homes and down the street, with cameras rolling. At the end of 1976 season, "60 Minntes" became a hit show, and that changed everything. It suddenly became apparent that a hit prime-time news program was a proper-of unimagined worth, infinitely more valuable than a hit entertainment show. Hewitt became a bona fide power broker at CBS, gaining the ear of top company executives, and he didn't always hesitate to offer his opinions on matters not directly related to "60 Minutes," There is much talk of the "60 Minutes" unit as a family, as it was being discussed as a possible co-anchor with Rather on "Evening News," or as the host of her own news series, Hewitt is said to have been outraged.

Sawyer, on the road for "60 Minutes" last week, said, "I love '60 Minutes." '60 Minutes' is where I want to be," Earlier in the year, there was some grief between Hewitt and Andy Rooney, the resident humorist whose segment, "A Few Minutes With Andy Rooney," has been one of the most popular portions of the broadcast since it started in 1978. Rooney, who spent most of his career at CBS as a writer, refused to appear on "60 Minutes" when the Writers Guild of America was striking CBS News last winter. Hewitt observed that Rooney continued to collect his salary and to use CBS news offices to write his newspaper column during the strike and openly considered replacing Rooney on the

For all the diversions, though, Hewitt remains the essential producer. "He screens each piece that goes on the air at least twice and more often three times or even four or five times, depending on how sticky his fingers are," Morley Safer said.

When ratings sagged three years ago and crincs complained that "60 Minutes" had lost some of its edge, Hewitt geared up, redirected the hroadcast's focus on world hot spots, and "60 Minntes" began to make news again and recover lost ratings ground.
"It's the beginning of the 20th year," Reasoner said, "and as you get that long. you should be making evolutionary changes. And I assume Don is making gency plans, and has in mind several candi-dates for a "60 Minutes" job should one become available.

For all the excitement that Hewitt and his unit occasionally stir inside CBS News, "60 Minutes" has mostly been the source of torment for the other networks, the linchpin of an unassailable Sunday-night lineup. Brandon Tartikoff, the president of NBC has given up trying to overtake "60 Minutes" by "counterprogramming" it — by placing a show appealing to a different type of audience opposite "60 Minutes." But next year, Tartikoff said, NBC will go after "60 Minutes" with something new: a show being called "90 Minutes" that would be an all-out, network-wide effort. He declined to elaborate.

It is true that the "60 Minutes" audience s aging along with the show, but it remains me of the most valuable to advertisers. Commercials on the broadcast will sell for $225,000 to $250,000 per 30-second spot this season; each episode has 13 30-second commercials; that means that CBS can bring in roughly $3 million per broadcast in revenues, against a per-show cost of less than $800,000.

Those are numbers that even the most devoted adversary can admire. And despite the age of its stars, despite the age of its audience, despite the portents of erosion, "60 Minutes" remains a show quite apart. Gerald Jaffe, vice president in charge of research at NBC, offers the highest sort of praise in a single sentence: "I wish we had

North for President? Great, Says Fawn Hall

Fawn Hall, the former secretary of Lieutenant Column Oliver North, thinks "it would be great" if her former boss ran for president. In an interview for ABC, Hall also said she "would be crushed" emotionally if either North or his one-time boss, Rear Admiral John Poindexter, were indicted in conjunction with the Iran-contra affair. ABC News, in releasing excerpts before the broadcast, disclosed that although it had said earlier there had been no restrictions placed on the questions that Barbara Walters could ask Hall, one of Hall's "new lawyers" changed that before the interview was to be held, saying that there were things Hall could not discuss because it might jeopardize her limited immunity against prosecution.

President Ronald Reagan is not going to like all those anti-contra photo murals in 25 Washington subway stations, especially since the artist won his right to buy space for his work in a LLS Court of for his work in a U.S. Court of Appeals decision written in 1984 by Judge Robert H. Bork, the president's nominee to the Supreme Court. Metro officials had refused to sell advertising space to Michael Lebron for his photo montage ti-tled "Tired of the Jelly Bean Republic?" which depicted Reagan and administration officials laughing at poor people and racial mi-norities. Metro officials refused to display the work — a composite of photographs — saying it was "deceptive." The court ruled that Lebron's right of free speech had been violated and Bork wrote that the censorship was unwarranted. Now comes Lebron with new posters in Metro stops. In bold type on each poster are the words: "We say we're against terrorism. In Nicaragua we're supporting it."

Three professors were awarded $170,000 prizes Tuesday in Milan by the International Balzan Foundation for outstanding research in psychology, anthropology and me-dieval history. An American, Jerome Seymour Bruner, 71, a Harvard professor, was cited for work involving human pyschology. Also honored were a South African pro-fessor, Philipp V. Tobias, for his studies in anthropology, and Sir Richard William Southern of Britain for medieval history. .
